You know you're in for a lively night when two of Hollywood's most colourful actors team up with Canada's most famous brothers.

Ben Stiller and Susan Sarandon had the room in stitches as they feted another dynamic duo, Drew and Jonathan Scott, at the 10th annual Artists for Peace and Justice (APJ) gala.

Describing the towering twins as "12-foot-something," Ben prepared to hand the pair their Peace and Justice awards. "What can't they do?" exclaimed Susan. "Jockey!" shot back the Tropic Thunder actor.

The "Property Brothers," 40, were recognized for their philanthropic work in countries including Haiti, which is the focus of APJ's efforts. "These guys represent what happens when you have a voice and you use it for good," said Ben.

Accepting the award amid friendly ribbing, Jonathan said: "We had a very humble childhood, a pretty simple life. We grew up on a farm—my dad was a Scottish immigrant who became a cowboy in Alberta..."

"His dad, not my dad," twin brother Drew interjected dryly, eliciting giggles from the crowd.

A-LIST APPETIZERS

The stars showed they were on a mission to serve – literally, as A-listers including Instinct's Alan Cumming played waiter to a roomful of VIP guests.

fonte, 91, was sadly absent owing to ill health, Haitian musician Paul Beaubrun (later joined by co-host Jackson Browne) paid tribute with a rousing rendition of "The Banana Boat Song" – and got everyone singing "Day-o!"

As the night drew to a close, a

"truly humbled" Drew took to Twitter to sum up his sentiments. "Thanks," he wrote, "for sharing our belief that we are on this Earth to give back... Together we can do great things."
